Waypoint Advocates | Customer Workflow Review

Jeff Pursley | Real-world review and working recommendations | September - October 2026 | Public summary

Problem observed

Call history and customer stage information were maintained in separate communication and CRM tools. Recreating a manual record of every call would add work without improving ownership.

My approach

Reviewed representative recorded-call patterns, call analytics, training guidance and available CRM workflows. Identified where front-line staff needed an intake and urgency screen, concise documentation, routing boundaries and a named next step.

Designed a conversational call playbook that begins with the caller's explanation, verifies any time-sensitive issue, separates routine tasks from professional advocacy decisions and confirms who will follow up.

Decision and recommendation

Retain calls and messages in the communication system; use the CRM for lead/client stage and commercial outcomes. Before claiming a conversion improvement, connect communications activity to verified CRM-stage results.

Escalate safety, discipline and other high-impact matters for authorized review rather than giving unsupported legal or educational conclusions.

Status and confidentiality

Working material required owner approval and workflow/access verification; no production integration, financial improvement or final policy approval is asserted. Names, recordings, pricing and proprietary internal guidance are excluded.
